tacked, and there is, of course, the danger that Honokaa will suffer also from the fire. The fire is considered the most dangerous in many years.

CANE FIRES IN HAMAKUA

Forest fires sweep the Hamakua district of Hawaii, threatening much of the cane crop of the district. Already, according to reports which have been received here, damage to the extent of some 400 acres of cane has been done, and the fire is not yet.

Forest fires sweep the Hamakua district of Hawaii, threatening much of the cane crop of the district. Already, according to reports which have been received here, damage to the extent of some 400 acres of cane has been done, and the end is not yet.

The fires began last week and the first reports coming by the returning steamer from Hilo told of the loss of 100 acres of cane by the Ooika plantation, part of the cane, it being feared later, growing on the Kukuihan lands. The trade winds have been blowing with unaccustomed fierceness lately and this has aided the spread of the fires. The long drought has made the entire district as dry as tinder and prepared it for the devouring element. As a result, when the steamer Maui passed along the Hamakua coast, the trees

The fire, however, could not be driven away from the plantations entirely and the latest news is to the effect that it again got into the ranchlands of Coahuila.

The fire, however, could not be driven away from the plantations entirely and the latest news is to the effect that it again got into the ranchlands of Guala and Kukuahu and the second fire covered about 500 acres of cane. This may be exaggerated for the reason that the fighting of the fire is going on all along the borders of the plantations and the reports may have been compiled from sectional reports which have overestimated the value involved. The same reports say that the entire force of the American plantations is now fighting to keep the fire from the cane fields.

It would be soon eating into the forests for a distance of seven miles from the ocean. The entire mountain side was bright with flame and under the fanning of the trades the fire was making headway to the higher levels of the fauna Res.

The fires, however, could not be driven away from the plantations easily and the latest news is to the effect that it will again go into the hands of the Guals and Kukulams and the amount covered about 500 acres of cane. This may be exaggerated for the reason that the fighting of the fire is going on all along the borders of the plantations and reports may have been compiled from sectional reports which have not covered the whole territory. The same reports say that the entire force of the American plantations is out fighting to keep the fire from the cane fields and that their success will be a good omen that it will be kept out of the rice estates.

The extraordinary height of the winds on the last two days has had a marked effect upon the fire and they will probably assist the hands of the Indians. A shower of burning fire balls falling in sufficient number to show their force, showed the fire becoming impracticable and the wind shift. It is said to be grave danger that the Yabams and Mamakus estates will be at-

of the Geary street temple, San Francisco. The two young people who were made husband and wife were Mr. Gus Schneider, the Hawaiian agent for Brown Brothers of San Francisco, and Miss Millie Stearns of that city. The wedding ceremony was performed at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Stearns on Alakaa street. The ceremony was most impressive. Miss Label and Mr. Frederick Stearns stood up with the bride and groom. The young couple go to Haleiwa.

There was a hurrying of backs and luggage to the later-island wharf last evening shortly before 6 o'clock. The vehicles contained some of the heaviest weights of the local financial world, stock brokers and others more or less interested in McIvry's Plantation. A little after five the chartered steamer Mikahala left for Elsie, Kauai, where the congregation of Islanders will be dispersed, and where they will proceed to McIvry's plantation to inspect the condition of the plantation. The return will be made on Sunday morning.

When, becoming infected with the gold fever, he joined the fortune hunters who turned their steps westward with "Pike's Peak or bust" as their motto. As was the case with many, he returned in the fall of the same year to Geneva, after several months of hard and profitless labor. He then continued the painting business on his own account until the breaking out of the war. Upon Lincoln's first call for troops in 1861, W. C. Wilder was the first man to enlist in the first company that was organized in the State of Illinois. There

The company arrived at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., on the 10th of August. From St. Louis Capt. Wilder's regiment marched through Arkansas to Vicksburg, and went under the first command of Sherman. Captain Wilder was in the battle of Arkansas Post, the battle of Chickasaw Bayou, the first battle before Vicksburg, and other engagements until March, 1863, when ill health employment until his brother engaged in the lumber business, and again sent for him to come to Honolulu, which he did in 1873, bringing with him his wife and three children. He was employed as lumber taylor for several years, and for five or six years before his brother died had entire charge of the business. After that gentleman's decease, W. C. Wilder assumed control of the whole concern, and has since conducted it in his own interest and that of his brother's estate. He also succeeded the latter in the presidency of the H. B. S.

Mr. Widger, always an enthusiastic American, took part in the overthrow of the monarchy and went to Washington as one of the five annexation commissioners. Soon after his return he became a member of the Advisory Council of the Provisional Government and its chairman. He also took part in the Constitutional Convention and was chosen President of the first Senate of the Republic. Just he filled with dignity and force. During the past year or two, however, Mr. Widger, under advice of his physician, kept almost
